

Red Umbrella

©2007 Mark Lemaire

It's a grey day, but you swing that red umbrella
Steppin' out on the street every cold grey morn
Going out in the cold rain, bearing down on a hard pain.
Every morning you're back again.

Day by day you dedicate the pavement, but this morning there's a light up in the sky
There's a gloaming behind the grey, every storm's gonna blow away
And all your hard work is gonna pay like a diamond from a seed.

There's a silver light behind the cloud 'cause behind it, your star shines out
And starting right now it'll come together, things are just gonna keep getting better
Starting right now it'll come together things are just gonna keep getting better

You been holding on to the path you were born with
You can break through, though you fear it might break you first.
Try to push through the cellophane, an invisible barricade
You try to breathe but you can't make it, but now you're breaking free.

There's a silver light behind the cloud 'cause behind it, your star shines out
And starting right now it'll come together, things are just gonna keep getting better
Starting right now it'll come together things are just gonna keep getting better

Congratulations how you dedicate your life
It's beautiful to see your star on the rise.

You're going back to the sign of your real home
To the place that was there for you all along.
You rising up to the world that you deserve
Through your dedication and nerve.

Starting right now it'll come together,
things are just gonna keep getting better.
Starting right now it'll come together,
things are just gonna keep getting better.

Congratulations how you dedicate your life
It's beautiful to see your star on the rise.
